

Best Winter Weekend Getaways from Boston

Boston is no newbie when it comes to blizzards—but after nonstop snowstorms and freezing cold temps, we'd want an easy weekend getaway, too. From Burlington to the Berkshires, these are our favorite New England towns to visit this winter.

Berkshires, MA

The bucolic Berkshire Mountains have long attracted Boston's city-slickers. This picturesque region in Western Massachusetts is known for its famous resident Norman Rockwell, who lived in Stockbridge for 25 years and is now commemorated with his own museum of roughly 1,000 original paintings and drawings—the artist's largest collection in the world. You can also tour Arrowhead farm, Herman Melville's former home, or Wheatleigh, a 19th-century Italianate mansion set on 22 acres of manicured gardens designed by Frederick Law Olmsted. For your own royal digs, check into Canyon Ranch in Lenox, a wellness retreat featuring healthy gourmet restaurants, personalized fitness experiences, and a 100,000-square-foot spa. On cold nights, head to the cozy Lion's Den pub to listen to live bands and sip mulled cider by the fire.
